...an interesting focus of the film is the art of restoration which is describes as 'another beautiful problem to solve'...

...the aim of the programme is to take viewers to one of the most revered places in the world...and to help bring this unique place to life'...

...to simply view the documentary as part of a parish community would certainly provide opportunities for informal question and discussion over a glass of wine...

...this DVD did what any performer should do: leaves its audience wanting more...

...it led me to consider my own personal treasures housed in the people I hold most dear and whether I show them rather more 'dogged persistence' than tender, loving care...

The Vatican may be one of the most famous places in the world, but it's also among the most mysterious; very few people have seen what lies beyond the Vatican's walls, and even fewer journalists have had free access to the tiny walled city that is the home of the Catholic Church. In 2001, National Geographic was given permission to enter the Vatican with a camera crew, and this documentary examines the city's 2000 years of history, as well as documenting the Vatican's historical archives and documenting private chapels which had never before been photographed to viewing by the public. Martin Sheen serves as host and narrator. The DVD is 60 minutes.
